HOW THE DANISH DEFENCE IS ORGANIZED

Organisational structure of the Danish Defence

The structure illustrates the main commands and supporting organisations within the Danish Defence

At the top of the organisation is the Chief of Defence, who is responsible for the overall military leadership and command of the Danish Defence. The Chief of Defence is supported by the Defence Staff, which provides strategic planning, operational coordination and administrative support.

The operational structure consists of several commands, each with a specific area of responsibility:

- Army Command – responsible for the development and employment of Denmark's land forces.
- Navy Command – responsible for Denmark's maritime capabilities and naval operations.
- Air Command – responsible for air operations and the protection and surveillance of Danish airspace.
- Special Operations Command – responsible for Denmark's special operations capabilities.
- Arctic Command – responsible for military tasks and operations in Greenland and the Faroe Islands.
- Joint Support Command – provides essential support and enabling capabilities across the Defence.

The Three services

ARMY - NAVY - AIR FORCE

Three services. Different environments. One Defence.

The Danish Defence is built around three military services: the Army, Navy and Air Force. Each service has its own specialised capabilities, personnel and equipment, while working closely together to protect Denmark and contribute to international security.

THE ARMY

The Army provides Denmark with military capabilities on land. Its personnel operate in a wide range of environments and are trained to conduct both national and international operations.

The Army combines personnel, vehicles, weapons, communications and specialist capabilities to create flexible forces that can operate independently or as part of larger multinational formations.

KEY CAPABILITIES

- Land operations
- Combat and manoeuvre
- Reconnaissance and surveillance
- Engineering and logistics
- Leadership and specialist support
- International operations and exercises

ARMY RANKS

Rank insignia identify a person's rank and position within the Danish Army. They are worn as a visible symbol of responsibility, authority and experience.

The insignia differ between officers, sergeants, corporals and conscripts, allowing personnel to quickly recognise the chain of command and their respective roles.

THE NAVY

The Navy provides Denmark with maritime military capabilities and plays an important role in monitoring and protecting Danish waters and surrounding areas.

With ships, crews and specialised maritime capabilities, the Navy operates in the Danish waters, the North Atlantic and internationally. It also contributes to surveillance, maritime security and cooperation with allied and partner nations.

KEY CAPABILITIES

- Maritime operations
- Surveillance and monitoring
- Protection of Danish waters
- Search and rescue support
- International maritime cooperation
- Operations in the North Atlantic and Arctic

NAVY RANKS

Rank insignia identify a person's rank and position within the Danish Navy. They are a visible symbol of responsibility, authority and experience, and help establish a clear chain of command.

The insignia vary between officers, sergeants, naval specialists, corporals and conscripts, reflecting the different levels of responsibility and roles within the Navy.

THE AIRFORCE

The Air Force provides Denmark with air capabilities and contributes to the surveillance and protection of Danish airspace.

Its personnel operate and maintain advanced aircraft, sensors and support systems. The Air Force can conduct operations from Denmark and abroad and works closely with the Army, Navy and international partners.

KEY CAPABILITIES

- Air operations
- Airspace surveillance
- Fighter aircraft
- Transport and support
- Search and rescue
- International exercises and operations

AIRFORCE RANKS

Rank insignia identify a person's rank and position within the Danish Air Force. They are a visible symbol of responsibility, authority and experience, while helping establish a clear chain of command.

The insignia differ between officers, sergeants, corporals, specialists and conscripts, reflecting the different levels of responsibility and roles within the Air Force.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE ARMY

The Danish Army is organised into a clear hierarchy of units, with each level having its own role, size and chain of command. This structure makes it possible to coordinate large numbers of personnel while maintaining clear lines of responsibility.

HOW THE ARMY IS ORGANISED

Starting from larger formations, a typical structure can be illustrated as:

BRIGADE → BATTALION → COMPANY → PLATOON → SQUAD → FIRE TEAM

Each level is made up of smaller units, allowing orders, information and responsibilities to be coordinated throughout the organisation.

BRIGADE

A brigade is a large military formation made up of several subordinate units, including battalions. Brigades are capable of coordinating a wide range of military capabilities and operations.

BATTALION

A battalion consists of several companies and is normally commanded by a senior officer. It provides a larger organisational framework for coordinating several units.

COMPANY

A company is a military unit typically consisting of around 100–200 personnel. It is normally divided into several platoons and is usually commanded by a captain or major.

SMALLER UNITS & TEAMS

As a company is divided into progressively smaller units, leadership and responsibilities become more direct. These smaller elements allow personnel to work together closely and carry out specific tasks as part of a larger formation.

PLATOON

A platoon is normally made up of several squads and forms a key link between the company and the individual soldier. It is typically led by a platoon commander, supported by other leadership personnel.

SQUAD

A squad is a small group of around 6 soldiers who operate closely together. A squad is normally led by a non-commissioned officer, such as a sergeant, and is responsible for carrying out tasks assigned by the platoon.

FIRE TEAM

A fire team is a smaller element within a squad. It allows personnel to work together in an even more closely coordinated team.
